POETRY.
Waiting For Thee.

Waiting for thee in the cottage door,
Ay—waiting to greet thee, love, once more.
The streamlet is sweetly murmuring now,
Bright clouds are kissing the mountain brow,
And breezes are scattering perfume sweet,
From flowery glens, where the waters meet.
Waiting for thee, when the golden light
Is dancing on the lakelet bright,
And the fleecy clouds so softly float,
Each seeming to me a silvery boat,—
In which spirits sail thro' the realms of air,
Wafting homeward each earnest prayer.

Waiting for thee, as I muse alone,

I miss thy harp's sweet changing tone—

Sweet is the voice, and soft the sigh,

Of the rill that gently ripples by;

But I love the songs that thou dost sing—

Dear memories to my mind they bring.

Waiting for thee, when the setting sun

Is telling another day is done;

When the twilight star from her azure throne

Doth gently rise—oh, bide thee home!

And when sweet strains from thy lyre I hear,

I shall know, my love, that thou art near.

REMINISCENCE OF BORDER LIFE.

About the middle of July, 1782, the Wyandots crossed the Ohio a few miles above Wheeling, and committed great depredations upon the southern shore; killed an old man whom they found alone in his cabin, and spread terror through the neighborhood.

Within a few hours after their retreat eight men assembled from different parts of the settlement, and pursued the enemy with great expedition. Among the most active and efficient of the party were two brothers, Adam and Andrew Poe. Adam was particularly popular. In strength acting as hard-horse, he had no equal—being finely formed and inured to all the perils of the woods.

They had not followed the trail far, before they were satisfied that the depredators were conducted by Big Foot, a renowned chief of the Wyandot tribe, who derived his name from the immense size of his feet. His height considerably exceeded six feet, and his strength was also represented as Herculean. He had also five brothers, but little inferior to himself, in company. They were the terror of the whole country.

Adam was everjoved at the idea of measuring strength with that of the celebrated chief, and urging the pursuit with a keenness which quickly brought them into the vicinity of the enemy. For the last few miles the trail had led them up the southern bank of the Ohio, where the foot prints in the sand were deep and obvious, but when within a few hundred yards of the point where the whites as well as the Indians were in the habit of crossing, it suddenly diverged from the stream and stretched along a rocky ridge, forming an obtuse angle with its former direction. Here Adam halted a few moments and directed his brother and the other young men to follow the trail with proper caution, while he himself still adhered to the river path, which led through clusters of willows, directly to the point where he supposed Big Foot to lie.

Having examined the prinding of his gun, he crept cautiously through the bushes, until he had a view of the point of embarkation. Here lay two canoes, empty and apparently deserted. Being satisfied, however, that the Indians were his chief, he relaxed nothing of his vigilance, and quickly gained a jutting cliff which hung immediately over the canoes, and which had only been possessing." He instantly heard a sharp report, and the Indian gun flashed. Both Indians sprang to their feet with a deep interjection of surprise, and for a single second they stared upon each other. This inactivity however was soon over. Adam was too much hampered by the bushes to retreat, and setting his life upon the cast of a die, he sprang over the bush which he had chosen, mistook him for the Indian, and sheltered him, wounding him dangerously in the shoulder. Adam turned and seeing his brother, called loudly upon him to "shoot the big Indian on shore." Andrew having heard that his brother was alone in the struggle with two Indians, and in danger, ran up hastily to the edge of the bank above, in order to assist him.

Another white man followed him closely, and seeing Adam in the river covered with blood, and swimming rapidly from shore, mistook him for the Indian, and fired upon him, wounding him dangerously in the shoulder. announcing that the other parties were engaged, but the trio below were too busy to attend to anything but to themselves.

Big Foot was for an instant stunned by the violence of the shock, and Adam was enabled to keep them both down. But the exertion necessary for the purpose was so great that he had no leisure to use his knife.

Big Foot quickly recovered, and, without attempting to rise, wrapped his long arms around Adam's body, and pressed him to his breast with the crushing force of a Bear Constrictor! Adam, as we have already remarked, was a powerful man, and had seldom encountered his equal, but never had he felt an embrace like that of Big Foot. He instantly relaxed his hold, and sent him sprawling back into the river. Big Foot uttered an exclamation in tones of deep contempt at the failure of his companion, and raising his voice to the highest pitch, thundered out several words in the Indian language which Adam could not understand and violent as to knock the tomahawk from his hand, and sent him staggering back into the river.
